This book depicts the story of an old man named Charley who has nearly completed his life's race and is determined to leave a legacy to future generations. The first three chapters are a written account of a child's life during the depression years and how his parents deal with the poverty that ensues. The following three chapters deal with the emotional upheaval he endures during his teen and high school years. The next several chapters deal with the joys and tragedies of raising a family, and the remainder of the book relates to his spiritual life, how it affects his relationship with people, and how it is reflected in his life's philosophy. The story encompasses a combination of history, humor, folklore, tragedy, and spiritual victory.
