Karina Longworth

In June 2007, Cinematical co-founder Karina Longworth became editor of SpoutBlog. Published by the film fan social network Spout, SpoutBlog was conceived as a daily dispatch from the center of contemporary cinephilia, dedicated to appreciating the under-the-radar and deflating the overexposed. The site soon became a key destination in the film blogosphere, particularly valued as a locus for discussions surrounding the ever-changing face of indie film. The Portable SpoutBlog is a collection of Longworth's most popular and controversial writings, culled from thousands of posts published over two years of daily blogging. It includes writings on films both super-populist (Ghostbusters) and specialized (the works of neo-indie auteurs Andrew Bujalski and Barry Jenkins); conversations with filmmakers emerging (Alejandro Adams) and established (Whit Stillman); dispatches from film events highbrow (Cannes) and low (Comic-Con); and snapshots from the frontlines of contemporary film culture.
