How To Find The Time And Motivation To Write Your First Book When The Clock Is Your Enemy.

It seems like a simple concept, you want to write a book, but the words never make it to the page. Sure, we all have things in our lives that require attention, but the difference between being a writer and aspiring to be a writer is whether or not you've written.

Drew Avera is a self-published science fiction author and he is here to tell you to "Get Off Your Ass And Do It Already". Drew knows a thing or two about multitasking. His career in the US Navy has taken him to other parts of the world and on his third deployment he only had 9 days off out of 187 days. It was during his time in the Navy he finally took the plunge towards accomplishing his dream; he started writing.

With more than a dozen published titles, Drew will tell you how he made the time to write while working full-time and taking care of his family. It takes hard work and dedication, but sometimes all you need is a gentle shove, and if that doesn't work there is always the "boot in the ass" to help you get started.

So, what are you waiting for? You're burning daylight and that book isn't going to write itself!
