Diagnostic Reasoning and Treatment Decision Making in Nursing Doris L. Carnevali, Mary Durand Thomas

An exploration of the thinking processes that lead to a nursing diagnosis. Numerous examples from all clinical fields, levels of care, care settings and patient types illustrate the cognitive process and assist with decision making for diagnosis and treatment. Using a focus on cognitive skills, the text shows readers how to evaluate and improve their approach; and identify the personal and environmental factors that influence a clinical decision. It also provides an ongoing program for improving diagnostic skills.
