How far would you go to save those around you from a madman?

James Davis is born into a life of strife and discord because of his abusive father, but his mother's love is the glue that holds his world together. He would do anything for her--anything to protect her. When she meets her fate at the hands of his father, James is compelled to make the man pay for what he has taken from him. Before he gets the chance, a stranger snatches the opportunity away, threatening James with his life if he tells anyone the truth about what happened. As mysteriously as he had appeared, he then vanishes into the night, passing from sight and down into the murky depths of James's memory.

Sixteen years later, James is still trying to cope with the events of that night. He has a normal life, for the most part, but he fears his childhood has left him a broken man from a broken home. As an adult, he now struggles with PTSD, anxiety, and other ailments. And then, the stranger who killed James's father all those years ago suddenly reappears and throws James into insufferable paranoia and chaos. Does the man's reappearance promise James deliverance from all his woes... or has he now come for James and everyone close to him?

If you liked M. Night Shyamalan's The Sixth Sense, and Chuck Palahniuk's Fight Club, you'll love Lorelei Logsdon's Comorbid!
