Heidi Collins becomes his love interest. She is the mayor's outspoken daughter, as well as the junior captain of the North Star Lady Warriors cheer squad, and a dancer. She's beautiful, has money and comes with a heavy load of baggage. After breaking up with the resident drug dealer, Dustin Ritter, she starts talking to Jack, and the pair go through their up and downs together, including a down where Jack becomes interested in Charlie Ross, Heidi's best friend. He was accused of murdering his wife after six year old Charlie points out that he ran from the house as soon as she entered, and found her mother stabbed to death in the middle of the living room floor. Denny isn't the only ghost from Charlie's past who returns to town. Her ex-boyfriend, Joel Rickus, went away and became a private investigator, who has been called back by Mayor Ryan Collins to investigate Joel's own father, Sheriff Paul Rickus. The sheriff has been accused of taking bribes plenty of times, but Ryan has a reason to believe that the biggest bribe he ever took was the one he received to cover up Stella's true murderer. Throughout the first half of the school year, Jack Mosier, Will Carmer, Kya Harper, Charlie Ross and Heidi Collins become a dysfunctional family, who fight each other, laugh together and ultimately, with the help of a few unlikely friends, such as both the Sheriff's children, solve the mystery of Stella's true killer. They also learn what it's like to live through a tragedy and come out on the other side, hoping to be better people.
